of the Fanbourg St. Antoine, but a lack of funds bars the way at present. M. Carrier, who, with Pere Hyacinthe, formerly belonged to the Dominican order, has been lecturing there. THE Bishop of Manchester, preaching recently at Blackburn, England, remarked that as there were only 13,750 benefices in England, while there were 23,080 clergy men, there must always be a large num ber of unbeneficed clergy, and of the 10-000 clergymen without benefices more than a thousand had served as curates for fifteen years and more, and many would never be promoted, though they did their duty faithfully and diligently.

THE "Interior" does not take a hopeful view of recruiting for the Presbyterian ministry:

"The statements made by Dr. Poor, Secretary of our Board of Education, in its recent circular, are worthy of grave and prayerful consideration on the part of the church. Unquestionably there is a great failing off in the number of young men offering themselves for the ministry, as well in the amount of money contributed by the church for their education. It is evident that the two defliciencies go together, keep pace with each other, and no doubt have a most intimate connection. It seems that at the present rate of progress our great Presbyterian Church is not adding as many ministers to her list, educated by her own institutions every year, as she loses by death. This is a fearful deterioration, and ought to be looked into by all our churches and all our pasnto by all our churches and all our pas-

minds the Christian at Work that giving Greek names adds nothing to a solution:

"There can be but one logical conclusion to such a premise: if every living creature has had its origin in pre-existent living matter, then there is no such thing as evolution of life from inanimate, sense less matter. Furthermore, if there was a time—as most scientists admit—when the world was in a gascous state, without a germ of life, then some mighty Power must have given life to the world by direct creation. Such a Creator the Christians call God; what scientist can call Him anything else? The fact, which is as important as it is significant touching these protoplasmic investigations is that the scientists have discovered not the potency, but the form of life. Life dwells in protoplasm; it is Huxley's 'physical basis of life,' but not life itself; it is the 'Bathy-lius' of Haeckel; but giving it a Greek name brings us no nearer to a solution of the reat problem. What is Life'." name brings us no nearer to a solution of the great problem, What is Life?"

THE Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford, England, said in a recent sermon that there never was a country in the world England possessed, and there never was a race of men, intelligent, earnest and enerwhich were separating the people, and that of the empires of ancient times.

A writer in the Boston Journal gives

"In Japan there were less than ten conliterature, and that derived from China; placards everywhere denouncing the very name of Christian, till the utterance of the word blanched the face and sent a thrill of horror through the listner. To-day more than two thousand five hundred professed believers in Christ; a recognised evangelical community three times larger; a fine body of earnest and native preachers; Christian schools for the preparation of a native ministry; a Christian literature, including more than one hundred thousand copies of portions of the New Testament; editions of the, Life of Christian dother works, reckoned by thousands and finding a ready sale; a Christian newspaper that circulates in all parts of the empire; and illustrating in their lives the faith that breathes through all more than a hundred and sixty devoted men and women from Christian lands—these are facts to quicken the faith and to encourage the noost vigorous exertions till the field be won."

The Philadelphia Times prints a history

INTELLIGENCER to the letter of a Boston clergyman to the Catholic Archbishop of New England on the subject of church gambling. The clergyman was the Rev. Henry Morgan, and he addresses himself to Archbishop Williams thus:

"I lectured sgainst fare banks and gam-lers. I have a list of the chief gaming ells of Boston and the names of the prohells of Boston and the names of the proprietors. The people demand that these infamous dens be suppressed, but nothing can be done until the church joins hand in hand in the work of reform. Durk, dark be the day when Christianity is banished! Woe! woe! to New England if the church loses hold. The church is already waning. It will altogether lose its hold if it encourages gambling. Now is your opportunity. You have more reformatory power vested in you than 500 other clergymen. You are Archbishop of all New England. You say 'Church lotteries shall case,' and they cease."

BISHOP HENDRICKSON (Roman Catholic), in a sermon in Providence, R. I., last Sunday, said of the anti-rent movement in Ireland:

in Ireland:

"To subscribe money to enable the people to become revenged on the landlords would only lead to fearful trouble and perhaps the hanging of a number of people. These agrarian outrages do no good, but, on the contrary, tend to bring the perpetrators into condemnation by all other nations, and fasten the chains of oppression tighter around the people. To stand bohind the hedge and blow out the brains of some obnexious landlord is most wicked and leads to terrible cylls. Some there are who ask for money to Some there are who ask for money to plunge the country into revolution, money to buy ships and proy upon English commerce, to buy gunpowder and dynamite to blow up barracks, but the people should take heed and discountenance all such revolutionary schemes. Ireland will never be made free from this side of the water. If asked to subscribe to keep up a peaceful agitation and send men of the right stamp to parliament, that is right, reasonable and proper, but dun't give your money to every one who comes shouting for Ireland, and professes all sorts of impracticable measures."

The Rev. H. 'R. Haweis, preaching re-Some there are who ask for money to cently at St. James's, Marylebone London, on the "Legitimate Amusements of Society," said that the Greeks knew some thing about human nature, and that they would not have invented one Muse for dancing and six for poetry and the drams if there was not something human and fundamental about these things, which neither cynic, sectarian nor ascetic could permanently crush. Mr. Vezin, in Mr. Haweis's opinion, however, was wrong when, in his paperat the Social Science we have fallen is to unsettle everything in the domain of christian faith. We are tauntingly told that it is folly to suppose that there can be no advance, no new discoveries of religious truth; that to settle down in the faith of our fathers is evidence of intellectual singunation, and that the stage and the spirit of this age of progress is to rexamine the foundations of faith, and rehounce many things that have been faught and believed by the church. But making all due allowance for the discoveries of modern research, it is certain that the foundations of christian faith must remain unshaken. They must be regarded as settled beyond a peradventure; and we must rest steadilists and immovable on this doctrine of the resurrection, or man has no basis for hope, and no stimulus to do. Life becomes a barren and empty thing, indescribably dark and desolate, if we must perish at death."

Dr. Allman's postulate, "Every living creature, from the simplest dweller on the confines of organization up to the highest and most complex organism, has had its origin in pre-existent living matter," reminus the Christian at Work that giving Greek names adds nothing to a solution. There can be but one logical conclusions of the confines of organization at Work that giving Greek names adds nothing to a solution.
